

AGC of California Names 2011 Constructor Award Winners

By Carol Eaton

Seven outstanding projects built by AGC of California contractors were chosen as winners in the 24th annual Associated General Contractors of California's Constructor Awards program.

Seven construction companies received Constructor Awards for their California projects in the 24th annual AGC of California Constructor Awards competition.

The winning projects, along with all of the Constructor Awards finalists named in this year's competition, were honored as the "best of the best" in California construction during the 2011 Awards Banquet and presentation at The Fairmont, Newport Beach earlier this month. The prestigious black tie event, the "Oscars" evening for the construction industry, was attended by nearly 300 people from top construction firms throughout the state.

In addition to naming the Constructor Awards winners and finalists, AGC of California presented awards to outstanding individuals and recognized projects that demonstrated excellent partnering efforts. AGC presented its annual Contractor Achievement Award to Gary Janco, Executive Vice President of C.C. Myers, Inc. The Award honored Janco's many years of service and accomplishments in the construction industry, including his active involvement in AGC's California and Nevada chapters as well as in several labor groups, the Construction Industry Crime Prevention program and more.

Three companies received Excellence in Partnering Awards this year from AGC of California. In the "Projects Under $50 Million" category, Sundt Construction and Administrative Office of the Courts received the award for the Richard E. Arnason Justice Center project. Two project teams received the partnering award in the Projects Over $50 Million category: Hensel Phelps Construction Co. and LAUSD, for the Robert F. Kennedy Community Schools; and MCM Construction and Caltrans, for the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge Oakland Touchdown Project.
